NOTE: The information provided herein is based on Census data and other available data that is consistent with Census data. In most instances, Census data represents the best available information. Because of the lack of specific data for each tribe and its service population, the information provided herein constitutes estimates drawn from Census data.

Definitions

The following definitions apply in this report:

Alone or in Combination: The term is used to include both everyone who considers themselves as American Indian and Alaska Native and everyone who considers themselves as American Indian or Alaska Native and one or more of any other racial category, such as Asian, Black, Hispanic, or White.

American Community Survey: A survey implemented by the Census Bureau each year that samples a small percentage of the population throughout the country.¹

Available for Work: Either having a job already, or not having a job but being able to work and wanting a job. Everyone who is in the labor force is available for work, but not everyone who is available for work is in the labor force. (See the definition of “labor force.”)

Census: “The complete enumeration of a population ... at a point in time with respect to well defined characteristics.”² In statistical terminology, the term “census” includes everyone in the population, as distinct from a “sample survey” which includes only a sample. In common statistical language, “surveys” are generally assumed to be sample surveys, rather than censuses.

Census Bureau: The largest statistical agency of the Federal Government, whose mission includes measuring the U.S. population—an assignment for the Federal Government that dates back to the first U.S. census of 1790.

Confidence Interval: The range of numbers for an estimate where there is a specified probability that the true measure of what is being estimated will fall within that range.³ Confidence intervals are provided in this report for estimates based on survey samples, especially with regard to employment rates. All confidence intervals are provided at the 90-percent probability level, where the midpoint of the range is generally the mean of the estimate.⁴

³ For example, there is an 89 percent chance that any spin of a pair of dice will yield a number between the value of 3 and 10 (inclusive). This 3-10 range is then said to be a “confidence interval” for the spin of the dice, with an 89 percent probability. Each confidence interval is dependent on the specified probability; the closer the probability is to 100, the greater “confidence” there is in the range, but the wider, and possibly less informative, that range will be. For instance, the confidence interval for the dice spin has a 94 percent probability with the range of 3-11, and has a 67 percent probability with a narrower range of 4-9. Subtracting the confidence interval from 100 gives the probability that the true value is outside the range. For example, we can say the confidence interval for the dice spin is 3-11, and still realize that about 6 percent of the time a spin of the dice will be outside that range.

Decennial Census: The process that occurs every 10 years in which the Census Bureau conducts a census to count every resident in the United States, as mandated by Article I, Section 2 of the Constitution. The last year in which the Decennial Census occurred was 2010 – the reference year for this report.

Employed Persons: “Persons 16 years and over in the civilian noninstitutional population who... (a) did any work at all ... as paid employees; worked in their own business, profession, or on their own farm, or worked ... as unpaid workers in an enterprise operated by a member of the family; and (b) all those who were not working but who had jobs or businesses from which they were temporarily absent because of vacation, illness, bad weather, childcare problems, maternity or paternity leave, labor-management dispute, job training, or other family or personal reasons, whether or not they were paid for the time off or were seeking other jobs. Each employed person is counted only once, even if he or she holds more than one job. Excluded are persons whose only activity consisted of work around their own house (painting, repairing, or own home housework) or volunteer work for religious, charitable, and other organizations.”⁵

Federally Recognized Tribe: “An American Indian or Alaska Native tribal entity that is recognized as having a government-to-government relationship with the United States, with the responsibilities, powers, limitations, and obligations attached to that designation, and is eligible for funding and services from the Bureau of Indian Affairs. ... Federally recognized tribes are recognized as possessing certain inherent rights of self-government (i.e., tribal sovereignty) and are entitled to receive certain Federal benefits, services, and protections because of their special relationship with the United States. At present, there are 566 federally recognized American Indian and Alaska Native tribes and villages.”⁶

Indian Country: Pertaining to the people who are members of federally recognized tribes in the United States, along with the governments, economies, land areas, communities, and cultures of those tribes, in their entirety.

Indian Affairs Labor Force Survey: A survey of federally recognized tribes that was designed and implemented by Indian Affairs during 2010 in order to acquire population data. Since data on each tribe is sparse or non-existent, this Report relies primarily on Census data on population and employment.

Indicator: A statistical measure that offers information about a closely related concept, which is of greater interest, but which cannot be feasibly measured. In the case of this report, for example, population indicators, such as AIAN populations living in the vicinity of tribes, are used to provide related information about service populations when direct measures of service populations were not available.

⁶ This is the official definition provided by the U.S. Department of the Interior, Indian Affairs, at <http://www.bia.gov/FAQs/>.

Labor Force: All people who are either “employed persons” (as defined above) or “unemployed persons” (as defined below). As also noted above, everyone who is in the labor force is available for work, but not everyone who is available for work is in the labor force.

Native American: Someone who is an American Indian or Alaska Native.

Margin of Error: The distance between the estimated mean for a statistic and the upper or lower bound of the confidence interval for that statistic. For example, suppose the confidence interval for a statistic on the proportion of people employed is 40 to 60 percent. In this case, the mean would be 50 percent, and the margin of error (on each side of the mean) would be 10 percentage points. Put another way, the confidence interval around the estimated mean is the range that is defined by the mean plus or minus the margin of error. (See the definition of “Confidence Interval.”)

Members of Federally Recognized Tribes: Individuals who are enrolled citizens or members of at least one federally recognized tribe.

Poverty Line: The poverty line or threshold is a specific amount of money that is compared to a household’s annual income. The amount of money used in this comparison varies by the characteristics of a household, such as family size. Households whose income is below the poverty threshold (i.e., “below the poverty line”) are said to be households “living in poverty” and everyone in that household is then counted as an individual who is living in poverty. The Census Bureau is the Federal agency responsible for measuring how many households in the United States are in poverty by geographic and racial characteristics, as well as by other characteristics.⁷

Public Law 102-477: The Indian Employment, Training, and Related Services Demonstration Act of 1992, as amended, which, among its many requirements, specifies the production of this American Indian Population and Labor Force Report. The precise requirements of the Act with regard to this report are provided below in the Background section.

Region: One of 12 geographic areas of the United States that have been defined in terms of the jurisdictions of the 12 Regional Offices of the Bureau of Indian Affairs. The names of these regions are: Alaska, Eastern, Eastern Oklahoma, Great Plains, Midwest, Navajo, Northwest, Pacific, Rocky Mountain, Southern Plains, Southwest, and Western. The tables in the report identify which regional office is responsible for providing services to each tribe. A map showing these regions is displayed in the front cover of this report.⁸

Service Population: The tribe’s estimate of all American Indians and Alaska Natives who are living on or near the tribe’s reservation (or tribal area) during the 2010 calendar year and who are eligible to receive services funded by Indian Affairs. This definition is consistent with previous American Indian Population and Labor Force Reports. The service population of a tribe is not the same as the members (or “enrollment”) of the tribe. For example, members of one federally recognized tribe, whose tribal area is not nearby, may be living nearby the tribal area of another federally recognized tribe and they may be eligible to receive services from that nearby tribe. In this case they will be recognized as belonging to the service population of the nearby tribe.

Tribal Statistical Areas: Geographic areas identified by the Census that define the boundaries of reservations or comparable tribal areas for the purposes of statistical data collection. These areas were recently established through the 2010 Census Tribal Statistical Areas Program.⁹

Unemployed Persons: The Bureau of Labor Statistics defines “unemployed persons,” for the purpose of the Current Population Survey, as “persons aged 16 years and older who had no employment during the reference week, were available for work, except for temporary illness, and had made specific efforts to find employment sometime during the 4-week period ending with the reference week. Persons who were waiting to be recalled to a job from which they had been laid off need not have been looking for work to be classified as unemployed.”¹⁰

“Unemployed persons” means only people who are not working and who are actively looking for a job. Unemployment does not simply refer to people who are not working. For example, people (ages 16 and over) who are not working but who would not be “unemployed” include people who are not physically able to work. Also excluded from the definition of unemployed persons are: (1) people who may be physically able to work but prefer not to work because they are already receiving income from other sources that allows them to prefer their current situation without wanting to get a job; (2) full-time students; (3) those who are home care providers to family members such as infants and small children; and (4) individuals who are institutionalized and thus unable to work, etc.

Executive Summary

This report presents findings from the 2010 Labor Force Survey of American Indians and Alaska Natives, combined with a larger set of publically available statistics produced by the U.S. Census Bureau. This report is prepared in accordance with Public Law 102-477– the Indian Employment, Training, and Related Services Demonstration Act of 1992, as amended. All of the statistics provided in this report are in reference to the year 2010—the most recent year for which adequate statistics were available for the purposes of the report.

This report is based primarily on populations of American Indians and Alaska Natives (AIAN) who are living on or near the tribal areas of federally recognized tribes. Most of the population indicators in this report, and all of the employment indicators, do not include members of federally recognized tribes who are living far away from any tribal area of any federally recognized tribe. This aspect of the report was necessary because of data limitations. Pursuant to the Indian Employment, Training, and Related Services Demonstration Act of 1992, this report provides estimates of “the population available for work” and estimates of “the employed population.” In addition, the report displays an “estimated percent of those available for work who are not working” for groups of tribes by state, region, and geographic area.

It is very important to note that this report does not provide any estimates of “unemployment.” “Unemployment,” as also defined above, refers to the proportion of people in “the labor force” who are not working, in accordance with the official Federal definition of “the labor force” as set by the Department of Labor. For example, people may be “available for work” in the sense of wanting a job, but would not be “in the labor force” if they do not have a job and are not actively looking for one. This measurement standard has long been established in the Federal Statistical System.

The above-mentioned standard definition of unemployment does not reflect any judgment as to whether people who are not working, and who want a job, should be actively looking for work. Indeed, it may well be the case that there are no job opportunities in certain areas of Indian Country, thereby making it pointless, or perhaps even irrational, for anyone without a job under these circumstances to be continually and actively looking for one in the same, economically depressed, geographic area.

The Act does not require this report to provide estimates of unemployment, and such estimates are not possible because data on the size of the labor force within tribal service populations are not available. Therefore, none of the statistics provided in this report should be seen as reflecting or representing estimates of unemployment. Anyone who uses the statistics provided in this report to infer any statement about unemployment with regard to any individual tribe, with regard to the tribes in a state or region, or with regard to Indian Country overall, will be misinterpreting and misrepresenting the findings of this report.

In accordance with the Act, however, this report does provide estimates of the proportion of people who are available for work but who are not working.

It is also important to note that the statistics provided in this report are not comparable to the statistics provided in any of the earlier American Indian Population and Labor Force Reports. With regard to employment levels, earlier reports used statistics that were provided by tribes in response to surveys implemented by Indian Affairs, because such statistics were compiled using a variety of different methods, they could not be used to compare one tribal area to another or produce a reliable aggregate total. This 2013 report uses employment estimates based on publically available statistics from the Census Bureau. Because of the lack of data for each specific tribe, Census data often is the only available data. As such, the data herein may not reflect actual employment levels. The two sources of information are not consistent, and cannot be used to draw inferences on how things might have changed between this report and previous ones. That is, what may appear as changes may, in fact, simply be differences that are attributable to differences in definitions and methodology.

The main findings of the report are:

- The sum of population indicators associated with all federally recognized tribes in the year 2010 is 1,969,167.
- The state with the highest population indicator was Oklahoma with 471,738 Native Americans living in or near the areas of federally recognized tribes. This is followed by California with 281,374, and then by Arizona with 234,891.
- The BIA region with the highest population indicator is Eastern Oklahoma, with 335,529, followed by the Pacific Region with 281,112, and then by the Northwest Region with 266,028.
- Approximately 28.1 percent of the service population is below 16 years of age, and there are slightly more boys than girls. Approximately 64.8 percent are between the ages of 16 and 64, with slightly more females. Those ages 65 and older represent only 7.1 percent of the population, and again there are more women than men (4.0 percent versus 3.1 percent).
- On average about 49-50 percent of all Native Americans in or near the tribal areas of federally recognized tribes, who are 16 years or older, are employed either full or part time in civilian jobs.
- According to estimated ranges based on a 90 percent confidence interval, in several states less than 50 percent of Natives Americans are working, among those who are 16 years or older and who are living in or near the tribal areas of federally recognized tribes. These states include Alaska, Arizona, California, Maine, Minnesota, Montana, New Mexico, North Dakota, South Dakota, and Utah.
- Approximately 21 percent of all Native American employees work for a government (federal, state, local, or tribal), though this too varies by tribe, state, and region. For example, it ranges between 8 and 12 percent in Iowa, and between 40 and 45 percent in South Dakota.

- An estimated 23 percent of all Native American families in the United States in 2010 earned incomes that are below the poverty line.
- The highest estimated rate of poverty is in South Dakota, with 43-47 percent of Native American families in 2010 earning incomes below the poverty line. The next highest rates of poverty are estimated to be in Arizona (31-33 percent), Minnesota (30-33 percent), Montana (32-36 percent), and Nebraska (30-37 percent).

Background

Under the Office of the Assistant Secretary–Indian Affairs (Indian Affairs), U.S Department of the Interior, information has been collected since 1982 on the population and employment conditions of American Indians and Alaska Natives in federally recognized tribes. This information has been published in the American Indian Population and Labor Force Report. Since 1992, the collection and reporting of this information has been performed pursuant to Public Law 102-477–the Indian Employment, Training, and Related Services Demonstration Act of 1992, as amended. 25 U.S.C. § 3416 (a). The Act provides for:

- [A] report on the population, by gender, eligible for the services which the Secretary provides to Indian people. The report shall include, but is not limited to, information at the national level by State, Bureau of Indian Affairs Service Area, and tribal level for the –
- (1) total service population;
 - (2) the service population under age 16 and over 64;
 - (3) the population available for work, including those not considered to be actively seeking work;
 - (4) the employed population, including those employed with annual earnings below the poverty line; and
 - (5) the numbers employed in private sector positions and in public sector positions.

This 2013 American Indian Population and Labor Force Report provides information on these measures in reference to calendar year 2010. Thus, it updates the previous American Indian Population and Labor Force Report that was published in 2007 in reference to calendar year 2005.

This report is based on two sources: (1) data collected from the 2010 Labor Force Survey implemented by Indian Affairs, and (2) publically available data from the U.S. Bureau of the Census. The data from the Census Bureau were specific to American Indians and Alaska Natives (AIAN), belonging to one race or to more than one race, in the 2010 Decennial Census and in the American Community Survey. When Census-based population data were used, only data for AIAN populations living in the vicinity of the geographic locations of federally recognized tribes were included.

Employment data in the report are provided on the basis of the Census Bureau’s published estimates. These data, however, are not reported in specific reference to each tribe’s “service population,” because there is currently no source of reliable data that exists at that level for each tribe. Rather, employment data from the Census Bureau’s published statistics are provided only as indicators of the level of employment in tribal areas. Such indicators are based on the observed employment of self-identified AIAN survey respondents who are living in or near the geographic areas of federally recognized tribes.

With regard to the economic indicators shown in the report, such as employment and poverty measures, the Census Bureau’s estimates for the year 2010 are based on 5-year averages centered on the year 2010, as opposed to being based on observations made only in the year 2010.

Population Estimates by State and Region

The “tribes” defined in this report include tribes, bands (of some larger federally recognized tribes), nations, rancherias, pueblos, colonies, communities, and Alaska Native groups recognized as eligible for funding and services from the Bureau of Indian Affairs and included in the current list of tribal entities, pursuant to Section 104 of the Act of November 2, 1994 (Pub. L. 103-454; 108 Stat. 4791).

“Total Service Population” is a tribe’s estimate of all American Indian and Alaska Natives who are living on or near its reservation or community during the 2010 calendar year and who are eligible to use BIA-funded services. The population is divided into those reported as “Age Under 16,” “Age 16-64,” and “Age 65 and Over.” Typically, American Indians and Alaska Natives included in a tribe’s service population live within a close distance of the reservation from where they can access the tribe’s services, and they typically do not live in distant cities, towns, or outside the United States.

Table 1 below provides population indicators for 2010 for federally recognized tribes, by state. There are four indicators measured, where each tribe is measured in terms of only one indicator, allowing for an aggregation across indicators for each state without any tribe being double-counted. Please note that these population indicators by state refer only to the Native Americans living in or near the tribal area of a federally recognized tribe; they do not refer to all of the Native Americans in the state who live outside any of these areas. Thus, states with large population centers that are outside any tribal areas will surely have larger Native American populations living throughout the state than the populations shown in Table 1 that are in reference to geographic areas in the proximity of tribal areas.

In Table 1, the first indicator is a tribe’s service area population (Indicator #1), as described above. These measures were acquired from the 2010 Indian Affairs Survey, and were found to be consistent with the maximum number of AIAN populations in the vicinity of the tribe in accordance with Census Bureau estimates.

Indicator #2 is a measure of the AIAN- population (reporting either one race or reporting themselves as AIAN in combination with another race), living in the designated “Tribal Statistical Area” (TSA) which the Census Bureau defines geographically in consultation with the tribes. The AIAN population estimates involving the reporting of one or more races will be abbreviated by the standard term “AIAN-AOIC” (AIAN-Alone Or In Combination with another race).

Indicator #3 is a measure of the AIAN population in counties that are in the vicinity of federally recognized tribes, i.e., the tribal area is in one or more of the counties themselves or is in a county that is adjacent to another county with an AIAN population.

In relatively remote areas, in which there is only one tribe, Indicator #3 was used, generally attributing to the tribe a larger population than what would be included in the tribe’s tribal statistical area. The reason for this is the recognition that many Native Americans, who are members of federally recognized tribes and who live nearby a tribal area, though they do not reside within the narrower tribal statistical area, may still travel to the nearby tribal area to receive services from that tribe. Similarly, if a group of tribes were next to each other, all in the same county (or group of adjacent counties) this indicator was sometimes attributed to the group.

Sources: Service area populations based on 2010 Indian Affairs Survey for cases which met consistency tests with data from the Census Bureau's Decennial Census; Population Indicators #2 and #3 from published Census Bureau estimates; and Indicator #4 from Indian Affairs internal estimates based on media coverage of two small tribes.

In certain other cases in which tribes were located adjacent to each other, and thus their tribal statistical areas were adjacent to each other this Report estimates the service population of each tribe as the population inside its own tribal statistical area. This estimation was made even though it is conceivable that any individual living in one tribal statistical area might visit a neighboring, adjacent tribal statistical area to receive services from that neighboring tribe. The estimation was made as a consistent means of acquiring useful indicators of service populations. Furthermore, these estimates are expected, on average, to “balance-out” somewhat. That is, while some individuals residing in the first tribal area may visit the second, nearby tribal area to receive services, other individuals residing in the second tribal area may visit the first tribal area to receive services.

Finally, there were three tribes for which there was no available information about their population from the Indian Affairs survey or from Census Bureau data. Indicator 4 then reflects the use of other sources of information on their populations, involving Indian Affairs data.

As shown, the sum of population indicators associated with all federally recognized tribes is 1,969,167 for the year 2010. The state with the highest population indicator was Oklahoma with 471,738 Native Americans living in or near the areas of federally recognized tribes. This is followed by California with 281,374, and then by Arizona with 234,891. Colorado and South Carolina have the lowest population indicators (aside from the several states that had zero), with 1,743 and 1,847 respectively. Figure 1 below presents the population indicators by states for all states with population indicators of 10,000 or more.

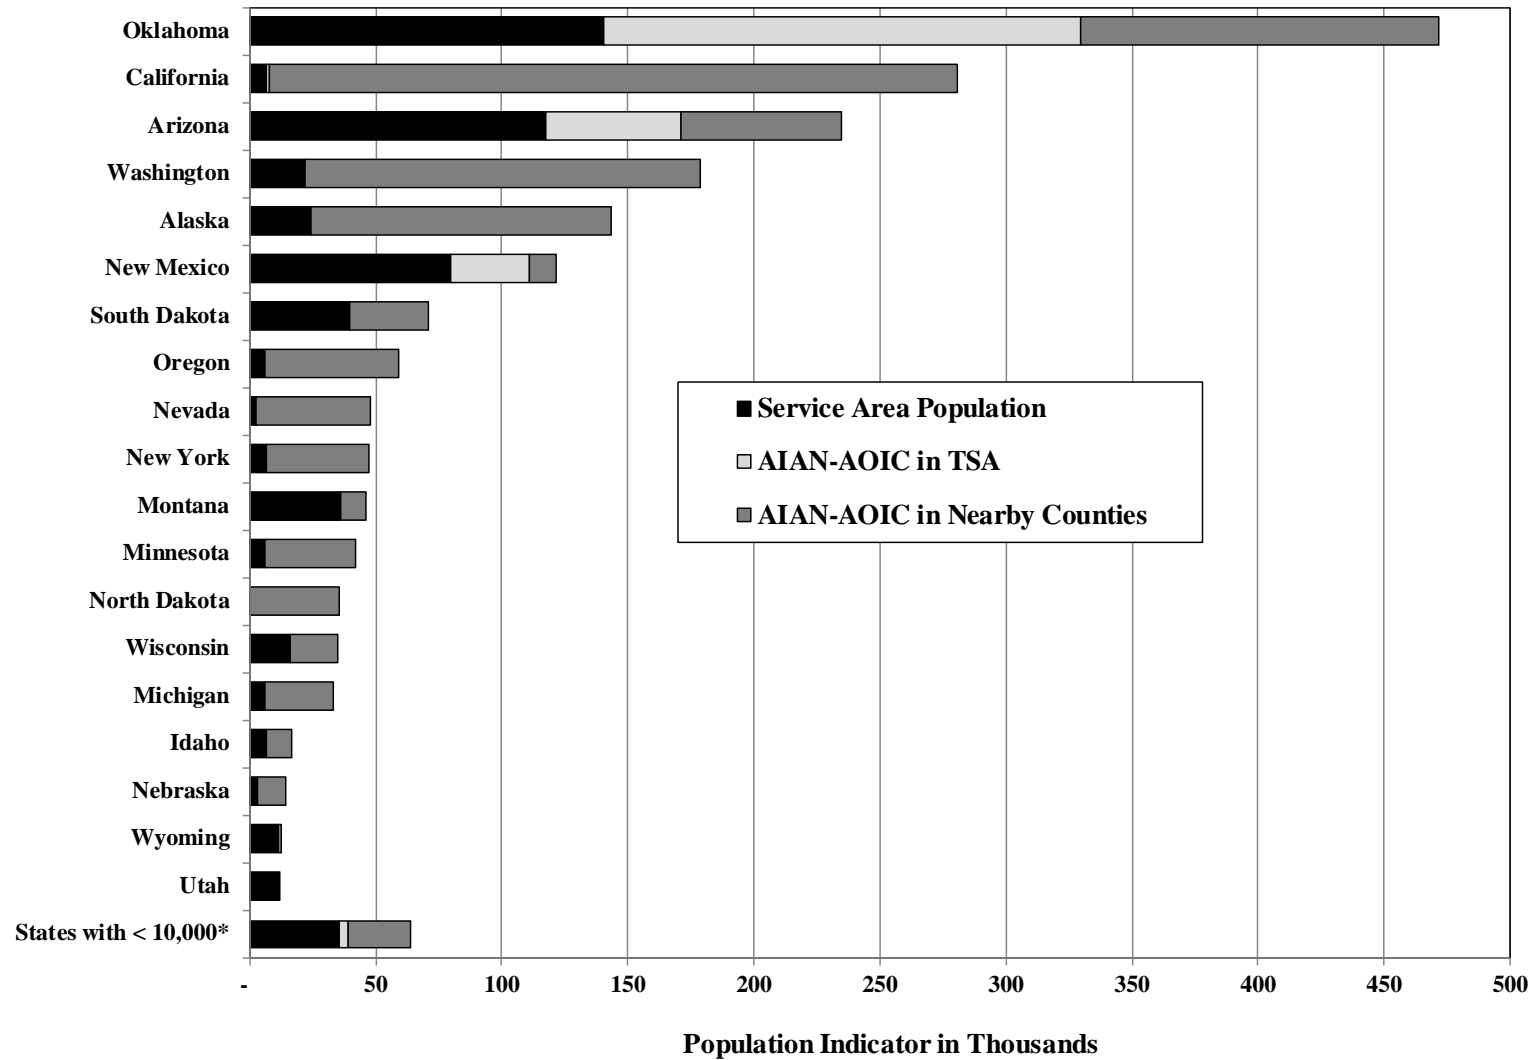

Table 2 provides these indicators by the 12 Indian Affairs regions. The region with the highest population indicator is Eastern Oklahoma, with 335,529, followed by the Pacific Region with 281,112, and then by the Northwest Region with 266,028. The region with the lowest population indicator was the Rocky Mountain Region with 52,316, and slightly higher than that was the Southwest Region with 54,330.

Analysis of the Location of Tribes

Of the 566 federally recognized tribes, approximately 24 of them have tribal areas that span across at least two states, and approximately 5 of them have areas that span across 3 states. In allocating their population indicators by state, divisions of these tribes by bands and by counties was performed so that some of a tribe’s population could be attributed to each state in which it could have a service population. In other words, an effort was made to divide tribal population indicators by state, based on where people actually lived.

For example, the “Fort Mojave Indian Tribe of Arizona, California, and Nevada” does, indeed, straddle these three States, and county data were used to attribute a population indicator to each of the three states. However, each federally recognized tribe (with one exception discussed below) is associated with a single Indian Affairs region. This is done for administrative and logistical purposes, primarily, so that one tribal government need only interact with one Indian Affairs office. Thus, even though the Fort Mojave Tribe is located in California (associated with the Pacific Region), the entire Tribe and all of its population indicators (including those individuals who are physically living in California) were attributed to the Western Region (associated with Arizona and Nevada). This helps explain, for example, why the population indicator for the State of California in Table 1 is slightly higher than the population indicator for the Pacific Region, even though the Pacific Region is defined in terms of being equivalent to the land area of the State of California.

For two tribes whose area transcended more than one state, reliable information on population could be acquired for these tribes themselves, but sufficient information was not available to split their population data by state. This accounts for the last row shown in Table 1, showing population indicators for “two or more states.” These two tribes were: the Northern Cheyenne Tribe of the Northern Cheyenne Indian Reservation (in South Dakota & Montana), and the Ute Mountain Tribe of the Ute Mountain Reservation (in Colorado, New Mexico & Utah). Thus, the population indicators for the States of Colorado, Montana, New Mexico, South Dakota, and Utah would be higher if more information were available regarding how the populations of these two Tribes might best be divided among these States.

Another exception was made for the tribe, “Metlakatla Indian Community, Annette Island Reserve,” which is physically located inside the State of Alaska. For historical reasons, the BIA Northwest Regional Office, rather than the Alaska Regional Office, is responsible for providing services to the Tribe. This therefore explains why the population indicators for the State of Alaska are higher than the population indicators for the Alaska Region, by precisely the estimated service population of the Metlakatla Tribe.

Appendix Table 1 presents a listing of all of the federally recognized tribes by their state and regional locations. It also lists in several cases divisions of the tribes based on various factors such as an effort to identify their presence in different states if their areas transcend more than one state (or if they are near a state border and therefore they may have service populations across the state border in another state). Some divisions were also made for different counties in establishing the most informative geographic groups of tribes. The table allows for a presence in as many as three states (State 1, State 2, or State 3) which are simply listed in alphabetical order of the state when more than one is applicable.

As indicated in the table, each federally recognized tribe is designated by an “organization code” that is divisible by 100. Any divisions of that tribe are then designated by a code that starts with the same digits but is not divisible by 100, to indicate that the division is part of the larger federally recognized tribe. For example, “T15400 Iowa Tribe of Kansas and Nebraska” transcends both Kansas and Nebraska (and not Iowa), and thus is given the two parts: “T15401 Iowa Tribe of Kansas and Nebraska, in KS” and “T15402 Iowa Tribe of Kansas and Nebraska, in NE.”

As also shown in Appendix Table 1, with one exception, each federally recognized tribe is affiliated with only one region. The one exception is the single federally recognized tribe “T32700 Navajo Nation.” That Tribe has as many as 10 sub-reporting areas (T32701, T32702, ..., T32710) which allow for population data to be split among the three States of Arizona, New Mexico, and Utah. However, all but the 10th area (by alphabetical order) of the Navajo Nation is assigned to the “Navajo Nation Region.” The 10th division, “T32710 Navajo Nation (Ramah Navaho Chapter)” is assigned to the Southwest Region, which is the Indian Affairs Office that interacts with that area (or “chapter” of the Navajo Nation). While there are 566 federally recognized tribes, Appendix Table 1 has 635 lines, implying that the region and states divisions of the 566 Federally recognized tribes has been a significant component of the analysis underlying this report.

Population Estimates by Geographic Group

For many of the tribes, data were not available by individual tribe but Census data was still available for groups of tribes in the same geographic area. Consequently, 81 geographic areas were identified to provide data for these broad groups. These geographic groups and their populations are presented in Table 3.

a. This population estimate may not represent the entire service population of the tribe. Some individuals in the tribe's service population may reside in other counties. Also, some of the AIAN county residents may not be members of Federally recognized tribes. The source of these data are the Census Bureau, Decennial Census and American Community Survey, AIAN-AOIC County Data.

1. Defined by the Counties: Broward, Charlotte, Collier, Desoto, Glades, Hardee, Hendry, Highlands, Hillsborough, Lee, Miami-Dade, Okeechobee, and Palm Beach. County AIAN population data were not used in this case; instead the population of the group was defined as the sum of the estimated populations of the two tribes according to Indian Affairs survey data.

2. Defined by the Counties: Antrim, Benzie, Charlevoix, Emmet, Grand Traverse, and Lelanau.

3. Defined by the Counties: Alger, Baraga, Chippewa, Delta, Luce, Mackinac, Menominee, Marquette, and Schoolcraft.

4. Defined by the Counties: Becker, Beltrami, Carlton, Cass, Clay, Clearwater, Hubbard, Itasca, Lake of the Woods, Koochiching, Mahnomen, Marshall, Norman, Pennington, Polk, Red Lake, Roseau, and St. Louis.

5. Defined by the Counties: Daniels, Dawson, Garfield, McCone, Richland, Roosevelt, Sheridan, and Valley.

6. Defined by the Counties: Billings, Bottineau, Burke, Divide, Dunn, McHenry, McKenzie, McLean, Mercer, Mountrail, Oliver, Pierce, Renville, Rolette, Stark, Towner, Ward, and Williams.

7. Defined by the Counties: Allegany, Cattaraugus, Chautauqua, Erie, Genesee, Livingston, Monroe, Niagara, Orleans, and Wyoming.

8. Excludes the Cherokee's Tribal Statistical Area in Ottawa and Washington Counties, OK. However, the total population shown for this area includes these parts and is thus an overestimate of the population.

9. Defined by the Counties: Cleveland, Kay, Lincoln, Logan, Noble, Oklahoma County, Pawnee, Payne, and Potawatomi.

10. Defined by the Counties: Benton, Clackamas, Gilliam, Hood, Jefferson, Lincoln, Marion, Polk, Sherman, Tillamook, Wasco, and Yamhill.

11. Defined by the Counties: Campbell, Corson, Dewey, Haakon, Meade, Perkins, Potter, Stanley, Sully, Walworth, and Ziebach.

12. Defined by the Counties: Chelan, Douglas, Ferry, Grant, Lincoln, Okanogan, Pend Oreille, Spokane, and Stevens.

13. Defined by the Counties: Barron, Burnett, Polk, Rusk, Sawyer, and Washburn.

What occurred for several of these geographical groups is that a group included some tribes for which no data by tribe were available, and the same group also included other tribes (or one tribe) for which such tribe-by-tribe data were, in fact, available. For example, suppose there were five tribes in the vicinity of three adjacent counties, and data were available on the individual populations for two of those tribes but not available for the other three. At the same time, suppose there were AIAN-AOIC population data for that group of three counties. In a situation like this, all five tribes would be included in the group, and the two tribes with population data would have their individual population data shown in other tables. However, in the aggregation of the population indicators across tribes, the tribe-by-tribe individual indicators would be used, and also subtracted from the group total when the data from all the groups were added to the total across states and regions. This thereby prevented any double-counting of individual tribal data that might otherwise arise from their being in a geographic group.

Population Estimates by Tribe

Table 4 provides the population indicators for 2010 by tribe or tribal division for those tribes (or divisions) for which such data were available. These data were acquired from the Indian Affairs 2010 survey, from Census Bureau data by county or tribal statistical area, or from other sources.

Appendix Table 2 provides population estimates for individual tribes. This appendix table, in combination with Table 3, provides the underlying detail behind Tables 1, 2, and 4 with regard to population indicators by state, region, geographic area, and tribe. As already mentioned, for many of the 566 federally recognized tribes, population estimates could not be provided at the level of the individual tribe with sufficient reliability or confirmation of accuracy. In these cases tribes were grouped together in ways that would allow for population estimates at least for their geographic group in the absence of individual data by tribe. The right-most column of Appendix Table 2 shows the geographic group to which a tribe belongs in cases in which population data for that specific tribe were not available. One can then look-up that group in Table 3 to see its population estimate.

Distribution by Age Group

Table 5 presents the percent distribution of AIAN-AOIC populations, in 2010, in states that have federally recognized tribes, by age group and gender. One important caveat that should be mentioned is that these statistics are based on AIAN-AOIC populations measured by surveys conducted by the Census Bureau, in which individuals “self-report” whether they consider themselves Native Americans or Alaska Natives. It is thus in reference to a larger population of individuals than those in the service populations of federally recognized tribes. Nevertheless, this table is based on the only dataset currently available on the distribution of Native American populations by age and gender, and is thus provided here as the most closely related information available.

As shown in the table, approximately 28.1 percent of this population is below 16 years of age, for which there are more boys (14.3 percent) than girls (13.8 percent). Approximately 64.8 percent are between the ages of 16 and 64, where there are now more females (32.8 percent versus 32.0 percent). Those ages 65 and older represent only 7.1 percent of the population for which there are significantly more women (4.0 percent, versus 3.1 percent men).

Source: Census Bureau published estimates of AIAN-AOIC populations. These data had population estimates for the age group 15-17 and age groups above and below them. These estimates were based on the simplifying assumption that 1/3 of all individuals in the age group 15-17 are 15 years old. The average is a weighted average among states with federally recognized tribes.

Some variation can be found among the states, with Alabama and Florida having the lowest proportions of children under 16 (below 22 percent) and the highest proportion of people ages 65 and older (over 9 percent). South Dakota had both the highest proportion of children (over 37 percent) and lowest proportion of people ages 16 to 64 (less than 58 percent). Nebraska had the lowest elderly population (below 4 percent). However, as mentioned above, these estimates refer to the AIAN-AOIC populations in these States and not to the specific service area populations of the federally recognized tribes.

Appendix Table 3 presents estimates, by individual tribe, of the distribution of the service populations by age group and gender. As indicated in the table, two methods were employed to arrive at these estimates: the results of the Indian Affairs 2010 Survey and the Census Bureau's estimates of these distributions by state.

Employment and Availability for Work by State, Region, and Geographic Area

Table 6 provides two related estimates on employment in tribal service populations, by state:

- The estimated percent range (and the midpoint of that range) of the tribal service population, ages 16 and over, who are working in civilian jobs; and
- The estimated percent range (and midpoint) of the population 16 and older who are available for work but not working.

The source of the first statistic is the Census Bureau's published estimates on employment of AIAN-AOIC populations in tribal statistical areas and in counties in the vicinity of federally recognized tribes. The data are provided as percentages, and also in terms of ranges, based on a 90 percent confidence interval.¹¹ These ranges, rather than "point estimates," were deemed to be necessary for many of these statistics because the Census Bureau's estimates of AIAN-AOIC employment in and near federally recognized tribes were based on samples of the population (whereas earlier population estimates were based on the full census of the population conducted in 2010). Because sampling was involved in the derivation of these employment statistics, confidence intervals in states with large service area populations tended to have quite small, such as a range of less than one percentage point in width in the case of Oklahoma, which goes from a minimum of 55.1 percent to a maximum of 56.0 percent for the first statistic mentioned. In contrast, states with relatively small tribal service area populations have much wider ranges. In

Source: Census Bureau published data on employment of AIAN-AOIC populations in tribal statistical areas and in counties in the vicinity of federally recognized tribes.

Notes:

1. Ranges are based on a 90 percent confidence interval, derived from the Margins of Errors (MOEs) in the published Census-Bureau data underlying these estimates.
2. This is based on the national average, for all individuals of all races, in 2010, of 67.25 percent of those ages 16 and older either having a job or wanting one. This proportion is based on statistics from the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

the case of Rhode Island, for instance, the same estimated percent of people employed (of those ages 16 and over) ranges from 38.3 to 60.3 percent.¹²

Table 6 shows that, across all of Indian Country, about 49-50 percent of all Native Americans in or near the tribal areas of federally recognized tribes, who are 16 years or older, are employed. Many of these individuals, however, are employed only part-time.¹³ Also shown in the table is that this percentage varies considerably across different states. Figure 2 illustrates the employment levels displayed in Table 6.¹⁴

According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, in 2010, for the Nation as a whole, there were 237.830 million people ages 16 and over in the civilian noninstitutional population. Of these, 153.889 million of them were “in the labor force” either working or actively looking for work, and another 6.059 million were not in the labor force but still wanted a job. For the purpose of this report, everyone in these three groups (working, actively looking for work, or not actively looking for work but still wanting a job) are considered “available for work.” The other 77.882 million Americans ages 16 and up is considered “not available for work” for a variety of reasons such as being full-time students, full-time care-providers at home for their children, retired, too ill to work, etc. Based on these statistics, the national average percent of all persons 16 and older in the United States who are “available for work” (for the purposes of this report) was found to be 67.25 percent.¹⁵

Because of the lack of information about employment among the service populations of the federally recognized tribes, this percentage was used as a rough benchmark for the percent of the service populations, ages 16 and older, who would be available for work in the tribal service populations. Therefore, the last three columns of Table 6 show estimates of the percent of people ages 16 and older population who are “available for work but not working” based on this benchmark.

In particular, and also as an example, when this benchmark is applied to Indian Country overall, it is found that the percent of people 16 years old or older, who are available for work but not working, ranges from 17.55 percent to 17.91 percent. These percentages were estimated by the following methods, respectively: (1) the benchmark percent of all those available for work (67.25) minus the maximum of the estimated percent who are working (49.70), and (2) the same ¹²The range for Alabama, 37-92 percent, is clearly too wide to be considered a useful statistic, but is included in the table for completeness in terms of reporting for each state that has at least one federally recognized tribe.

¹⁴ States with a confidence range of over 13 percentage points were excluded from the figure for ease of presentation.

¹⁵ That is, $67.25 \text{ percent} = 100(153.889+6.059)/237.830$. The figure of 67.25 percent is shown here as rounded, though the unrounded figure (67.25307993 percent) was used in the calculations. The source of these statistics was the Bureau of Labor Statistics. More precisely, the number of people 16 and over in 2010 in the United States civilian, noninstitutional population (237,830,000) and in the labor force (153,889,000) is from “Household Data and Annual Averages, Table 1. Employment status of the civilian noninstitutional population 1942 to date,” <http://www.bls.gov/cps/cpsaat01.pdf>. The number of people in 2010 who were outside the labor force but “want a job” (6,059,000) is from “Household Data Annual Averages, Table 35. Persons not in the labor force by desire and availability for work, age, and sex,” <ftp://ftp.bls.gov/pub/special.requests/lf/aa2010/pdf/cpsaat35.pdf>.

By State and Average Across Indian Country

benchmark percent (67.25) minus the minimum of the estimated percent who are working (49.34).

Table 7 provides that same employment information as Table 4, but with regard to the 12 Indian Affairs regions instead of the states. Since regions are larger in terms of AIAN-AOIC population than states (with the exception of the Eastern Oklahoma Region being within the State of Oklahoma) the margins of error around the estimated percentages for the regions are much lower than they are for the states. The Navajo Region clearly has the lowest proportion of employment—only 35.2 to 37.0 percent. The Great Plains Region also has a low range of employment—only 42.1 to 43.8 percent. In contrast, the highest range of employment is in the Southern Plains—at about 57 percent.

Table 8 also displays the estimated percent of tribal service populations (who are 16 and over) who are working and the estimated percent available for work but not working—this time for selected geographic areas. The geographic areas in Table 8 were defined in terms of counties which contain, or are in the proximity of, federally recognized tribes, in areas where data are not available for each of the tribes in the group (though data may be available for some of the tribes in a group, as explained earlier). These are the same geographical areas that were shown in Table 3 except for the two areas in Table 3 that relied on the Tribal Statistical Areas instead of counties (the Cherokee Nation Main Tribal Statistical Area, OK, and the Muscogee Creek Tribal Statistical Area, OK). Employment statistics with regard to these last two tribes are provided in the data on individual tribes.

Employment by Tribal Statistical Area and County

Table 9 presents the estimated proportions of employment, by tribe, in corresponding tribal statistical areas and in nearby counties in 2010. Tribes are not listed in the data if neither of these statistics were available for those tribes. Any tribe that is missing from Table 9 can nevertheless be associated with one of the geographic areas identified in Table 8, where the estimates for that corresponding area in Table 8 would reflect the employment situation in the general area of the tribe. (Appendix Table 2 cross-links tribes by these geographic areas.)

As Table 9 illustrates, more data are available on employment of AIAN-AOIC populations with regard to tribal statistical areas than with regard to the counties in the area of federally recognized tribes. For some tribes, however, data are available for both, and in some other cases data are only available at the county level.

In interpreting the statistics presented in Table 9, it is important to note the following limitations:

1. The AIAN-AOIC population living in the tribal statistical area is a subgroup of the larger service area population of the tribe. Thus, these statistics serve as indicators of the employment situation of the larger service area population, but they are not measures of the employment levels within the service area population. Indeed, the smaller the TSA population is as a proportion of the service area population, the less reflective the TSA statistics will be of the service area population, as a general tendency.

Source: Census Bureau published data on employment of AIAN-AOIC populations in tribal statistical areas and in counties in the vicinity of federally recognized tribes.

Notes:

1. Ranges are based on a 90 percent confidence interval, derived from the Margins of Errors (MOEs) in the published Census Bureau data underlying these estimates.

2. This is based on the national average, for all individuals of all races, in 2010, of 67.25 percent of those ages 16 and older either having a job or wanting one. This proportion is based on statistics from the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Source: Census Bureau published data on employment of AIAN-AOIC populations in tribal statistical areas and in counties in the vicinity of federally recognized tribes.

Notes:

1. "XX" indicates cases in which the tribe is in more than one state. See Appendix Table 1 for more details on the location of the tribe by state.
2. Ranges are based on a 90 percent confidence interval, derived from the Margins of Errors (MOEs) in the published Census-Bureau data underlying these estimates.

2. More data were available by county for AIAN-AOIC populations than for AIAN-AOIC employment levels. As a result the county-based estimates presented in Table 9 involve fewer counties than the counties used to estimate service area populations. For example, a tribe may have a service population in two adjacent counties, for which AIAN-AOIC population data were available, but in only one of these two counties AIAN-AOIC employment data may have been available. In this case, the proportion for the one county for which the employment data were available was reported in the table. However, this does contribute to greater uncertainty with regard to the county-based estimates than would exist if more complete county data were available.
3. It is important to note that these are statistical estimates based on sampling (rather than a complete population census), and they are therefore subject to a significant level of uncertainty. More precisely, the ranges shown for the proportion of employment (among those ages 16 and older) are based on an estimated 90 percent confidence interval. This means that the true statistic, reflecting the absolute reality of who was actually employed and who was not is expected to be within the reported range only 90 percent of the time. In other words, there is a 10 percent chance that the employment proportion is outside the range shown in Table 9, with a 5 percent chance it is below the range, and a 5 percent chance it is above it. Put another way, of the 322 tribes listed in Table 9, on average we would expect that about 5 percent of them (or about 16 of these tribes) will have a true rate of employment in their TSAs for 2010 that is below the lower boundary of the range reported, and another 5 percent of them (or another 16 of these tribes) will be expected to have a true rate of employment in their TSAs that is above the upper boundary of the range reported.
4. Given the wide range of uncertainty around the midpoints for employment rates shown in Table 9, the uncertainty outside the ranges shown (as just described), and the additional uncertainty with regard to how much the statistics for the TSA truly reflect the employment rate of the entire service area population, it must be realized that the statistics provided should not be relied on as a basis for decisions regarding individual tribes.
5. As already noted, Tables 6, 7, and 8 provide estimates of the proportion of people ages 16 and over who are available for work but not working, by state, region, and geographic area, respectively. These estimates were only possible based on the assumption that 67.25 percent of all people who are 16 and over are available for work, according to the national average for 2010 for all Americans. However, because many individual tribes are facing rather unique economic and demographic characteristics, it would be inappropriate, i.e., too unreliable, to make this 67.25-percent assumption for each individual tribe. Therefore, this report does not provide estimates on a tribe-by-tribe basis of the proportion of people available for work who are not working.

Workers in the Government Sector, and Families below the Poverty Line

Table 10 below provides estimates of the proportions AIAN-AOIC workers in states with federally recognized tribes who work for the government sector. These are based on publically available data provided by the Census Bureau from their American Community Survey (ACS). It is important to note that the population base for these statistics is the AIAN-AOIC population which includes individuals who are not in the service populations of federally recognized tribes. Nevertheless, these are the only statistical information available on this kind of measure, and they are thus presented here for illustrative purposes.

As shown in the table, approximately 21 percent of AIAN-AOIC workers are employed with a government (Federal, state, local, or tribal). In this case, this average reflects the AIAN-AOIC population across all parts in the United States, not just the states that have federally recognized tribes. This proportion, however, varies substantially by state. It is below 12 percent in Iowa, for example, and over 40 percent in South Dakota.

In addition, Table 10 provides estimates of the percent of AIAN-AOIC families whose income is below the poverty line, by state, also based on publically available ACS data from the Census Bureau. The national average for 2010 is about 23 percent. Commensurate with its relatively low level of employment, South Dakota is the State with the highest proportion of poverty among Native American families—between 43 and 47 percent. Figure 3 illustrates the poverty ranges presented in the table.

Acknowledgments

Although data from the Census Bureau on AIAN populations by geographic area were publically available, Ms. Tina Norris and Mr. Alfred Gottschalck at the Census Bureau were instrumental in their assistance by providing summary tables of the data and by explaining their definitions. They also provided technical guidance on the methodologies used to derive many of the estimates. The extensive effort by Ms. Norris, in terms of the time she devoted to providing these data, is especially appreciated.
